TŌHŌ GAKU— EAST ASIAN STUDIES AT THE UNIVERSITY

Tōhō gaku in Japanese and Dongfang Xue in Chinese—rendered in classic characters at the right—means East Asian Studies, a field that has grown in significance at the University of Alberta in the last decade. And the field within that field that perhaps has grown most strikingly has been Japanese language and literature.

The University's program in Japanese language received national recognition last year in the form of a special grant for 1976-77 and 1977-78 toward providing permanent Japanese language staff. According to Hazel Jones, Japan area specialist in the Department of History and the person almost individually responsible for the development of Japanese language studies on campus, the grant consists of a major portion of the interest on a quarter of a million dollars from the Japan Foundation held in trust by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada to promote Japanese studies in Canada. The original grant from the Japanese government was one million dollars, and one quarter of the interest on this was assigned permanently to each of three Canadian university centres. The remaining quarter was open for national competition. "Although Alberta was unfortunately omitted from the original consultation," says Dr. Jones, "it did enter the national competition, and our program has been recognized."

Japanese studies began at the University of Alberta in 1961, when Japanese history was taught by B.L. Evans as part of a course in East Asian History. Six years later, Dr. Jones joined the staff as a specialist in Japanese history and language. She initiated Japanese language studies as a service to senior Japanese history students—after all, you can't go very far studying the history of a people without learning its language. Thus, the original Japanese language course on campus was History 603, Documentary Japanese for Historians. (A companion course, History 601, Documentary Chinese for Historians, was also initiated by Dr. Evans.) "We owe so much to the History Department," she said. "Colleagues have been very understanding and cooperative." The course soon broadened to admit graduate students from other departments. And since then five students have gone on to Japan for graduate research.

In the 1976-77 Calendar courses in Asian languages and literatures are shown separately for the first time, although they are still sheltered in the History Department. History 601 and 603 continue to service history graduate students, but they have been joined by courses listed as Chinese and Japanese language and literature. In fact, the Calendar does not reflect actual course offerings: eleven Japanese language and literature courses are being taught this year, three of them intensive double courses. "We've had wonderful support from the language labs for these courses," Dr. Jones commented. Students spend several hours each week in language labs for these introductory language courses, in addition to six hours in class. Corrective tutorials are also scheduled regularly and students are assigned to them according to their individual needs.

This year a full program of thirty-two courses is in the process of being approved. In addition to introductory, intermediate, and advanced language courses and literature in translation, there will be courses in calligraphy, classical Japanese, Kanbun (the reading of Chinese as Japanese), Japanese for readers of Chinese, conversational Japanese, and readings in classical Japanese, Japanese drama, Japanese poetry, Japanese journalism, and Japanese prose.

Besides Dr. Jones, who continues to teach Japanese history, Yukie Miyakawa has been teaching Japanese language and literature since 1972. Professor Miyakawa is a tanka poet, a master calligrapher, a master of Utaï, the chant of the classical Nō theatre in Japan, and an apprentice in classical dance, as well as a language and literature specialist. The two are joined this year by a Visiting Assistant Professor and two assistants. S.R. Munro, with two assistants, is teaching Chinese language and literature. "Professor Munro and I are the only westerners teaching East Asian languages," Dr. Jones said. "Everyone else is Japanese or Chinese."

In spite of extraordinarily heavy teaching loads, staff concentrate on giving considerable personal attention to their students—"That's how we produce such good people," Dr. Jones said proudly. "But we are running over fifteen students per section in our intensive course. That's too many. There should be ten, for the kind of instruction we consider necessary." The eighteenth student had squeezed—literally—into one section that day, the second day in the term. When told that the course was closed because there was physically no more room, she announced she would sit on the floor.

Seventeen honors and graduate students appeared in the first Japanese language course, History 603, the first year its was offered, although it had been approved too later to appear in the Calendar and was not advertised. Now in the Japanese language program alone there are about one hundred students; in fact, one hundred is roughly the enrolment ceiling until more full-time staff can be added. "The number of students enrolled here is almost equal to the number at UBC, where there is a much larger staff, and greater than Toronto and York together."

Languages and literatures are the essential core of East Asian Studies at the University, but there is a creditable breadth of offerings in several other subject areas: history, of course, and especially religious studies, anthropology, political science, art and design, comparative literature, and linguistics. A relatively new four-year special BA program in East Asian Studies can be composed in a variety of ways, based on Japanese, Chinese, or both, a general program or a program with concentration in language and literature, religious studies, anthropology, or history. The program can be as broad or as deep as the student chooses.

Who enrolls in such an apparently esoteric program as Japanese language and literature? "I would like to say, since it began in the History Department, that our students are all earnest history students," Dr. Jones said. "But they're not. We expected, especially in Alberta, to have a fair proportion of nisei and sansei—second and third generation Japanese Canadians, but there are very few. The majority of our students are from Business Administration and Commerce and from Science, and several are from Medicine." According to Dr. Jones, the particular interest of scientists in studying Japanese lies in the recent prominence of Japanese scientific and medical research.

The interest of business people in Japanese language and culture is a noticeable phenomenon in Alberta and perhaps answers why, in the University of Alberta, of all places, a Japanese language program should make such progress. "Aside from the fact that any university worthy of the name should cover all areas of human knowledge," said Dr. Jones, "we found that people wanted this program." Some high schools are beginning to teach Japanese in evening courses and Professor Miyakawa has helped to establish an evening course at the University of Calgary and Japanese language schools in Calgary. Significantly, one school is sponsored by Japanese companies for the children of Japanese employees. "Our Japanese History course is offered at night and courses in language and culture are also taught in the late afternoon to allow business people to take them."

The community has further shown its interest in Japan by establishing programs like Contact Japan, sponsored by the Alberta Government, and the Lions' exchange program. Both programs allow Alberta high school students to tour Japan, live in Japanese homes, and learn directly about Japanese culture.

Graduates of the East Asian Studies program are well-equipped for virtually any career involving East-West contacts. International business and trade are obviously enhanced by an understanding of both cultures—in fact the Canadian government is sponsoring a visiting professorship in Canadian studies in Japan concurrent with Japanese government support of Japanese studies in Canada. Graduates are now working in government departments of External Affairs and Consumer Affairs, international and corporate law, environmental and resource development, journalism, food planning and processing, and teaching and research at all levels.

Both master's and doctoral programs with Japanese concentration are already well established in certain disciplines. The crucial exception has been advanced language and literature. Now, with assistance from the Japan Foundation and support and encouragement from the Consulate-General for Japan in Edmonton and from the Faculty of Arts, Dr. Jones feels certain that a separate Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures will be created very soon. The grant from the AUCC-Japan Foundation to help staff the program is a major step toward permanence.

PEOPLE

- H. Clifton Young of the Department of Marketing and Economic Analysis in the Faculty of Business Administration and Commerce presented a lecture entitled "The methodology of studying product development" and conducted a workshop on "The Creation and Management of Developing Products in Our Changing Canadian Environment" at the University of British Columbia in mid-December.
- Karol Krotki, Professor of Sociology, visited the genealogical data holdings in the main library of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (commonly referred to as the Mormon Church) in Salt Lake City. His purpose was to learn about the demographic, genetic, and medical uses to which this immense data base with many millions of individual datum can be put. While in Salt Lake City, Professor Krotki delivered a seminar to the interdisciplinary group in population on the demographic characteristics of the Canadian Eskimos (Inuits) and native Indians.
- L.C. Green, University Professor, has been appointed a member of the Academic Committee of the International Institute of Humanitarian Law, San Remo, Italy.
- John King-Farlow, Professor of Philosophy, was re-elected Trustee of the Philosophers' Information Service and Counselor of the (international) Association of Philosophy Journal Editors at recent meetings in Boston.

VISITORS

- W. Kinnersley of Montana State University at Bozeman, Montana, delivered a Theoretical Physics Seminar entitled "Symmetries of the stationary Einstein-Maxwell equations" on 12 January.

BOOKS

- Ukrainian Poetry in Canada by Yar Slavutych, Department of Slavic Languages, was published recently in Edmonton with the help of a grant from the Ministry of Culture, Province of Alberta.

APPOINTMENTS

James N. Neelley, formerly Head of the Division of Speech Pathology and Audiology at the University of Kansas, is the new Chairman of the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology. Dr. Neelley, who holds a BA and an MEd from the University of Texas and a PhD from the University of Iowa, has held appointments at both those universities. He joined the University of Kansas as an Instructor in 1959; he was made Assistant Professor in 1961, Associate Professor in 1965, and Professor and Head in 1970. Since 1963 he has been a Research Associate in the Bureau of Child Research at the University of Kansas, and he is a principal investigator for a teaching program in his specialty for the United States Office of Education. Dr. Neelley has a number of publications on subjects such as functional disorders of speech, stuttering, speech perception, and communication problems.

Ronald Savitt, Associate Professor, has been appointed Chairman of the Department of Marketing and Economic Analysis in the Faculty of Business Administration and Commerce. Dr. Savitt joined the University in 1973; before that he spent a year as Fulbright Professor in Marketing at the School of Administrative Sciences of Bogazici University in Istanbul, Turkey. Dr. Savitt, who holds a BA and an MBA from the University of California and a PhD from the University of Pennsylvania, has also held academic appointments at Boston University. In 1970-71 he served as Senior Economist for National Economic Research Associates Incorporated of New York. He has a number of publications, among which are articles on the evaluation of government marketing programs and agencies; currently, he is preparing a working paper on theory in marketing.

NON-CREDIT COURSES

OIL SANDS GEOLOGY

The fundamental geology of Alberta's oil sands will be explored in a course beginning 2 February. It will be of interest to those who work in oil sands-related industries, to people engaged in oil sands research and technology development, and to those who would like some insight into the nature and origin of oil sands resources. Previous knowledge of geology is not required.

The course will cover depositional history of the oil sands, oil migration and maturation, physical characteristics of the sands and the bitumen, mining and extraction techniques, environmental concerns, development potential, and significance in the world energy picture.

The fee for the course is $30 and is payable in 228 Corbett Hall. Additional information and brochures are available by calling 432-5532.

ENGINEERING FOR BIOLOGISTS AND OTHER INTERESTED NON-ENGINEERS

Engineering needs the expertise of biologists, environmentalists, and other technologists to mitigate the environmental impact of engineering projects. In order to provide engineering background information so that this expertise can be utilized, the Faculty of Extension is offering this course to all interested people.

The course will provide a better understanding of engineering and the ways in which others can influence engineering projects in light of environmental issues. It will deal with the application of engineering science in a number of specific public works and industrial applications, emphasizing both technical and economic constraints that form the infra-structure of our way of life.

Among the specific topics to be discussed are alternative energy sources and the environment; the effect of engineering structures and the impact on the water regime; water supply and sewage disposal; and geotechnical basics with emphasis on site selection, foundation design, and slope stability.

The course will begin 27 January. It is an evening course to be held for ten Tuesdays from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The fee is $45 and is payable in 228 Corbett Hall. Additional information and detailed brochures are available by calling 432-5532.

PROSPECTING II

A course is being offered for those interested in prospecting for fun or profit. Although it has no formal prerequisites, it is strongly recommended that participants should have already taken Prospecting I (Rock and Mineral Identification) or university geology courses in order to gain full benefit from this course.

Topics to be covered include a geology review, geological maps and reports, aerial photography, prospecting methods, geochemical and geophysical exploration, sampling of mineral prospects and assays, staking and surface development, mining economics and minemaking possibilities, placer mining, and marketing and finance.

Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $55 including two textbooks and lecture notes. Additional information and brochures are available by calling 432-5532.

INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX RETURNS

The Federal Income Tax Law as it applies to individuals and the preparation of individual income tax returns will be discussed in a course that begins 27 January. The course will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. for six sessions.

Topics to be covered in this course are income from an office or employment, pension income, income from self-employment, income from other sources, deductions from total income, deductions from net income, and computations of federal and provincial tax.

Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $45 including materials. Additional information is available by calling 432-5066.

NEGOTIATING AND ADMINISTERING COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS

Negotiating and administering collective agreements will be examined in a ten-session evening course beginning 3 February. The course will aid in preparing negotiating personnel for collective bargaining and will assist all those involved in administering a collective agreement.

Among the topics to be covered are the legal framework, the parties to a collective agreement, collective agreement contents, labor economics, and rules and discipline.

The course will be held from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The fee is $75 including materials and textbook. Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. For additional information telephone 432-5066.

MANAGEMENT OF PERSONAL FINANCES

How to manage the money you have to your best advantage will be discussed in detail in this course. The topics include the role of personal finance, personal and family budgeting, consumer credit, investments, insurance principles and applications, will and estate planning, income tax overview, small business operations, and consumer behavior.

The course will be held for twelve Wednesdays beginning 2 February from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $55 including materials. For additional information telephone 432-5067.

MINI-COMPUTERS

A three-day seminar on mini-computers will be held from 23 to 25 February. The seminar has been designed to provide a thorough understanding of small computers and microprocessors at all levels. To further reinforce classroom computer experience, demonstrations of mini-computer and microprocessor application in research facilities will be given.

Additional details on this seminar are available by calling 432-5066. Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $150 including materials and luncheons. The registration deadline is 14 February.
